The Story of Draught

Below is a brief description of what each style of beer is. NOTE: Each location might not have all selections

LAGER – The yeast used during the fermentation process is the difference. Lagers have bottom fermenting yeasts, which in turn don't typically give the beer any fruity flavors or strong aromas. It allows for a cleaner, lighter and crisper taste.

ALE – Ales on the other hand use top fermenting yeasts, which allow for fuller bodies, stronger aromas and sweeter flavours. With some ales, there can be a bittering agent added to counteract the sweetness. Typically, they can be found in darker colours.

IPA – An IPA or India Pale Ale, is a subcategory of an Ale. An IPA is usually quite bitter and has a very strong flavour. Accompanied by the flavour is typically a higher alcohol percentage. Typically, an IPA is a lighter chocolate colour and can sometimes be cloudy.

WHEAT ALE – This type of Ale is more of a seasonal beer, found during the summer months. Wheat Ales are typically filled with citrus flavour and often accompanied by an orange or a lemon. They are commonly very cloudy beers but should have a crispy refreshing flavour.

PILSNER – Pilsners are a type of lager that originated in the Czech Republic. They tend to be a light golden colour. Some have a strong hop flavour, spicy floral notes with a crisp finish that have made them arguably the most popular beer in the world.
